Good morning, Mr. Secretary. Sew. And how is your Excellency to-day? Lin. The march of Sherman down to the Sea; And the problem solved by his victory; Breaking with his right arm the shell That held Rebellion, makes me feel well. Sew. O, twas a fearful march even down to the sea. Lin. O, Cruelty, thou art the shameless pride of war! But how does my good Secretary stand the shock, the labor and the jar of troublous affairs, at home and afar? Sew. Well. Lin. I am glad it is so. I need your counsel, your wisdom, now. How will the news of our victorious arms rest on the jealous hearts of European nations? Our own and the interests of England are so interwoven that surely she will not further hindrance lay. And France beholds Mexico with dismay. Sew. I reckon, as a Yankee should, Napoleon stands with shivering blood; While Maximilian s speedy fall...
